Sigurd®

A typeface family of 21 fonts & three different Styles.

The Knight-font, the s-word to vanquish dragons.

Designed by Léon Hugues and Matthieu Salvaggio, inspired by the hero of the Nibelungen Saga, Siegfried. Sigurd is a font family gathering its inspiration in the shapes of swords, feudal armours and Medieval lettering work.

It aims to be an elegant font family yet deeply strong in its design construction. The design process started from an old scrap of letters found in an obscure set of the Eda stories. The letters drawn in an extreme italic version of the word ‘Sigurd’ were the starting point from which Matthieu and Léon focused their efforts to design a wide font family.

The typeface family consists in seven weights with two sets of matching Italic with different angles for a total of 21 fonts. The Semi italics remain with hints from the Roman version, while the Italic turn into a fully italic’s historical design.

The variable version of the typeface family will allow you to explore these features from the Weight & Italic axis in one single font file.

Containing a wide set of alternates, swash and various open type features, it’s a large font family which will allow you to experiment a lot with it and enables incredible type focused designs.

Pretty much like practicing with a sword, you'll need to spend time with it, trying it out, discovering its sharp endings and eloquent shapes. Manoeuvring this font family will be a pleasure as it is full of perfected little details which will grant any layout a pleasant reading rhythmic.

Well-tried old knights and youthful met there in frequent clash, there was sound of shattered lances that through the air did crash, and along before the castle were splinters seen to fly from hands of knights a many; each with other there did vie. The king he bade give over: they led the chargers out: There was seen all shattered many a boss well-wrought. And many a stone full costly lay there upon the sward. From erstwhile shining shield-bands, now broken in the jousting hard. The guests all went thereafter where seats for them were reared; They by the choicest viands from weariness were cheered. And wine, of all the rarest, that then in plenty flowed. Upon both friends and strangers were fitting honors rich bestowed. In such merry manner all day did last the feast. Many a wandering
